IMPROMPTU.

Written during an evening Military Parade.
BY MARY W. PRICE.
O sweetly sound the merry bells
So bold and clearly ringing!
And sweet the harp's soft music swells,
Its gentle murmurs flinging;
Sweetly the lute's soft voice may greet
The organ's swelling anthem come;
But there's no music half so sweet
As the "rub-a-dub-dub" of the drum.

No wonder that the soldier's heart
With brave and noble daring fills,
That purposes heroic start,
As on his ear that music thrills;
No marvel at its stirring notes,
That thoughts sublime roll on their tide,
While over him there proudly floats
The banner of his country's pride.

Now clearly on the night air calm
That martial strain is loudly swelling;
Its echoes wake a strange alarm,
And seem of conflict fearful telling;
Insults, too long and tamely borne,
Now loudly call for stern redress;
And 'twill be given—that warlike tone
And drum's deep cadence answer Yes!

Oh, in this wild, conflicting hour!
In thrilling accents it shall speak,
And onward roll with startling power,
"From vale to vale and peak to peak,"
Till thrilling with the kindling word,
Each soul shall glow with purpose high,
And grasping stern the ready sword,
The hearts of oak shall make reply.

The opening cannon's mouth in vain
May threaten with its living fire;
In vain spread out the blood-drenched plain,
Where friend and foe in death expire;
They feel no throbs of quailing fear,
Their noble souls think not of death,
And willing at their country's call,
They yield to her their latest breath.

GRANBY, May, 1861.

"GOOD BYE."

BY JEAN WELLS.
Borne along on wings as lightning
Swift the fleeting moments fly,
And the hour is drawing nigher
When we each must say "good bye."

Scarce we dare to break the silence,
Bound as by a magic spell;
One fond, lingering look is given,
Speaking more than words could tell.

Tear drops on the eyelids glisten,
Hands are clasped in silent woe,
Each sad, earnest look is telling,
"O! I cannot let thee go."

Still we linger, loth to sever,
Still the hour is drawing nigh,
When we part, perhaps forever,
Bid one last, one fond "good bye."

Tender let the word be spoken,
Let its music thrill the soul,
Lest that magic spell be broken—
Binding us in sweet control.

Oh that hour will be remembered,
Oh that memory love to dwell
On each look, each parting token,
From the friends we loved so well.

Like a cadence in the music,
Like the low wind's gentle sigh,
Lingers in our hearts the echo,
Of that parting word, "good bye."

Sweet yet sad will be its memory,
And we scarce suppress a sigh,
As the thought comes startling o'er us,
"This may be our last good bye."

GUILDHALL.

BY MILTON CUTLER.
Guildhall is situated in the southern part of Essex County, nearly 40 miles from Canada line; and, by the old stage road through Danville, about 70 from Montpelier, and, by way of White River Junction, 150 miles; bounded N. by Maidstone, E. by Connecticut river, S. by Lunenburg, W. by Granby, and contains 19,477 acres. The soil on the plains and intervals is very good and easily cultivated; on the hills strong, and generally better adapted to grazing than grain growing. Newly cleared land formerly produced excellent crops of wheat, but of late years it has been by no means a sure crop, and our people depend chiefly upon the West. Most of our farmers, however, raise some every year, and occasionally get a fair yield. Agriculture is the almost exclusive pursuit; cattle, horses, sheep, swine and poultry, corn, rye, oats, buckwheat, peas, beans, potatoes, maple sugar, etc., are the principal products.

There is a small village in the N. E. corner of the town containing the county buildings, Congregational meeting-house, academy, post-office, three stores, two public houses, a lumber and grain mill, one blacksmith's shop, one law office, and is connected with Northumberland, N. H., by a good toll-bridge. The best farms and principal wealth are in the south part, which is also connected with Lancaster, N. H., by a toll-bridge.

The market facilities are now good by means of the Grand Trunk railroad, which is, at the Northumberland depot, less than four miles distant; but there are no streams, except the Connecticut, that afford water power of much account. Hence, the large quantities of lumber, especially pine, which this town and vicinity produced, have been drawn to the river and floated down to find a market in Massachusetts, Connecticut and some intermediate towns.

There are several small streams upon which mills have been at different times erected. "Spaulding's Brook," which takes its rise in Granby and by a circuitous route runs through Maidstone and empties into the Connecticut, is the stream upon which the first mills were built; from which circumstance it received its present name of "Mill Brook."

There have since been saw-mills upon this stream within the town of Maidstone, the last of which was built during the last summer (1861) by Z. K. Washburn & Sons. Somewhere about the year 1830, Gilbert B. Mann built a saw-mill on "Burnside Brook," about half a mile from the river, which did considerable business during high water. Said brook probably received its name from the circumstance of a Mr. Burnside, one of the first settlers of Northumberland, having lived on the river bank directly opposite its mouth; and so the high hill around whose base the stream courses, was called "Burnside Mountain." Several mills have been erected on other small streams, but some years since became extinct.

Another mountain stands by or near Burnside mountain, and the two appear like twins, the second being named "Cow Mountain," which received its name from the following circumstance:

In the earlier days of the town there lived in that part of the same denominated the "North Road," a sable African, called Bacchus or "Old Bacchus," who resided in that neighborhood for a considerable number of years. He was physically powerful and fond of sport, usually good natured, but of sufficient amount of temper when offended. At last he broke up housekeeping and retired to the forest upon this mountain, taking with him another man's cow without leave, and for some time sustained himself in the woods, baffling his seekers. But at last, having like greater mortals, reached the end of his chain, was captured and imprisoned, and did not long survive his misfortune.

There are none of nature's wonders exhibited in this vicinity, more picturesque and grand—and our scenery is pleasant and even in many points beautiful, including the views of the hills of New Hampshire, and particularly the White Mountains, which are seen from many localities in this and other towns lying along one of the most beautiful rivers—the Connecticut.

Our state geologists decide we are not located in one of the fields that are natural deposits of mineral wealth; there is, however, a bed of iron ore in the west part of the town, though not thought rich enough to encourage capitalists to work.

This town was chartered by Governor Wentworth, of New Hampshire, Oct. 10, 1761. It was granted to Elihu Hall and 63 others. These original proprietors appear to have been residents of New Haven County and vicinity, in Connecticut. Their first proprietary meeting was held at New Haven on the last Wednesday of October, 1761. The first deed was given by John Blakeslee, Enos Todd, Giles Dayton, Samuel Mix, David Thorp, Joshua Ray, Gershom Todd, Titus Tuttle and John McClure to John Hall, 5th, and dated Nov. 6, 1761; the second, by Daniel Mackey to John Hall, 5th, dated Nov. 6, 1761; but by whom the name of Guildhall was given to this town is not known.

There is a town or locality in England, near London, of the same name, and, as far as known by us, the only one in the world.

The proprietors held frequent meetings and passed sundry votes preparatory to occupying their lands, but as appears did not themselves first settle, or perhaps not even visit the same, until men from another state (Massachusetts) had occupied portions thereof. The first actual settlement seems to have been brought about by other means.

It will be recollected that, during the French and Indian war, several unsuccessful expeditions were planned and attempted for wresting Canada from France. One of the means employed by the authorities of the Province of Massachusetts to induce young men to enlist in one of these expeditions, was an offer to apprentices of freedom from their indentures. One of those who accepted this offer was young Emmons Stockwell, an orphan, whose parents died when he was very young. Upon the failure of the expedition to which he was attached the soldiers composing the same became disorganized and separated into small parties and returned on their own account. It was winter, and the sufferings of these men proved so severe that many died by the way. It was the fortune of young Stockwell and his party to strike the Connecticut river near its head waters, and follow its course until they reached settlements, and by this means he became acquainted with much of this beautiful valley. Mr. Stockwell arrived home ragged and penniless, and returned to and completed his apprenticeship; and, in the spring of 1764, David Page, David Page, jr., aged 18 years, Emmons Stockwell, now 23 years old—Timothy Nash, George Wheeler, and a Mr. Rice left Lancaster, Mass., for the purpose of commencing a settlement in the Connecticut valley.

County Court.

The case of William Roby vs. Boston & Maine railroad which was tried before a jury last week resulted in a disagreement of the jury and notice has been made for a new trial. The case grew out of an accident to the plaintiff for injuries received while employed as a section hand a year ago when he fell in front of a moving handcar in the south yard and was badly injured in the back. In the trial the defense let the case go to the jury without putting in any evidence. The next case set for trial was that of N. A. Beach vs. Boston & Maine Ry. Plaintiff, some years ago, owned and operated a mill at North Derby near the railroad, and the mill was burned. It was alleged that the fire was caused by sparks from a locomotive. This case was to have been tried before a special jury, but it was discontinued and is out of court.

A session for the consideration of naturalization papers was held Saturday, Oct. Monday afternoon the petit jury were chosen in the case of F. H. Wright vs. Town of Brighton. This is a suit for damages for injuries received in an automobile accident which took place in October 1914 when the auto ran out of the road and into a ditch in the town of Brighton. This case was tried in the March term of court and was decided in favor of the defendant. Exceptions were taken as we understand it, and is the occasion for the case being retried. Witnesses are many and the case is being ably handled by counsel on both sides. It is doubtful if the case is finished this week. Several cases of a similar nature have been settled and discontinued. Seven more civil cases are set for trial.

Automobile Accident.

A serious automobile accident occurred last Friday morning when a touring car owned by George B. Young of Newport and driven by his son, Harold came in contact with a telephone pole on Indian Point street near the residence of T. E. Donaghy. In the car besides the driver were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Conboy. The force of the impact was so great that Mr. Conboy was thrown forward, striking the car side from which he sustained a broken rib which punctured his lung. Dr. Adams was called and relieved the man's suffering temporarily and advised his removal to the hospital at St. Johnsbury, which was done on the 9:40 train. Mrs. Conboy beside a severe shaking up was uninjured as was Mr. Young.

The cause of the accident is wholly problematical, but owing to the fact the car was being driven at a high rate of speed something must have served the car in making the slight curve in the street where Indian Point street crosses Northern Avenue throwing it out of its courses striking a plank sluice at the road and continuing striking the telephone pole which broke from the force also the forward axle of the car was squarely broken at the junction, but the momentum was so great that the car was carried forward for a distance of 25 feet before it broke axle plowing in the lawn of Mr. Donaghy.

This place is the most dangerous one in the village as the bend in the street makes it impossible to see far ahead, and it is the custom of automobilists to increase the speed so that the incline at the head of Indian Point street can be made without changing the gear. Too much care cannot be exercised in driving automobiles in our village and a rate of speed should not be maintained so but what the car at all times is under complete control of the driver.
